

Robin Jackson, Chief Executive Officer, ADR International

Robin Jackson, CEO of procurement consultants ADR International, is one of the best-known and respected figures in the procurement world. He has held senior management positions with major corporations including the Ford Motor Company, Philips Electronics and Nissan before joining ADR International in 1988.

With ADR International he has amassed a wealth of hands-on purchasing experience with clients worldwide in Europe, the US, South Africa, APAC and Australasia.

He has led projects in many sectors including pharmaceutical, automotive, engineering, rail, FMCG, financial, building materials and footwear.

Robin regularly writes for publication and is happy to speak with authority on any issue connected with purchasing, procurement and supply chain management, at local or global level.

He became CEO of ADR International in April 2007 when the company restructured to take advantage of increasing demands for procurement services.

He now leads the company which is headquartered in the UK and also has offices in Australia, South Africa and the US. Its clients include some of the world's largest corporations such as Alcan, Disney, GE, Nokia and Pfizer.

ADR International is one of the longest-standing global procurement consultancies, established in 1986. It now offers a full range of procurement services covering consultancy, training and development, interim and permanent recruitment, sourcing, technology and audit.
